“ Every Rose Has It's Thorn

Before the the poison really set in, I used to ask Dad to play this on his guitar and sing it for me. I just remember being mesmerized by his talent. And how much I loved him and longed to be with him more. I was so young and didn't understand what all he was battling.

This hurts worse than I could've imagined. The longing to have him the way that I never could, the guilt, the emptiness of that void, the helplessness. The loss. I didn't lose someone I talked to everyday but I lost someone I loved, someone that I SHOULD have had. A Dad. My Dad.

I know I lost him a long time ago. Over and over. But this recent event has caused all of those buried feelings to rush back.

This song has a new meaning now.

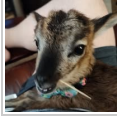

I love you, Dad. I know you loved me. I know you loved Jesus. I am so grateful that you are healed and at piece. And I'll look forward to seeing you in that form when we are finally reunited one day.

I'm Soo Soo sorry for this loss of your father, Ashley. It's heartbreaking of what could have should have been but I have no doubt he loved you and he is at peace now. I know this is a very difficult time for you. Much love to you now and always. Love, Aunt Noelle

I am so sorry of your loss!! I know you don't know me, but your dad and I were very good friends many years ago!! I'm not sure how he passed, but I'm glad that he's at peace now! I do know that he is loved by so many, including myself! He was a dear brother and friend!!
